The University of Delaware is home to almost 22,000 students and employs over 1,000 full-time faculty in addition to administrative staff and researchers. Below we have honed in on a group that makes up 17% of UD’s population; it’s international community.

What’s Trending: While it appears that Chinese is the predominant nationality on campus, more Saudi Arabian and other Middle Eastern students are studying in the US due to increased support from their home governments. In fact, this is the second year that UD has hosted more Saudi students (348) than Chinese (284) at the English Language Institute.

UDs international community is comprised of over 4,200 people of varying national origins, fields of study and research. That is enough to line main street in Newark 2.5 times!
